

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.
2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.
3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft,

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

CONFIDENTIAL

before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

4. The NIC will have a small [] support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equally, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience--an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

CONFIDENTIAL

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.

2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.

3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft, before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

CONFIDENTIAL

4. The NIC will have a small [] support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equally, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience--an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.
2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.
3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft, before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

CONFIDENTIAL

4. The NIC will have a small support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equally, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience--an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.

2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.

3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft,

CONFIDENTIAL

CONFIDENTIAL

before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

4. The NIC will have a small support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equally, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience--an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.

2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.

3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft, before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

CONFIDENTIAL

4. The NIC will have a small [] support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equally, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience--an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

CONFIDENTIAL
NEW NIC STRUCTURE

The National Intelligence Council will be restructured as follows:

1. The NIC will be subordinated directly to the DCI. Although the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC will report independently and directly to me, I expect there to be the closest possible collaboration between the two. I do not see the NIC as encroaching on NFAC's preserve but rather serving as a conveyor of otherwise unobtainable information on policy issues and important ideas with which NFAC analysts must grapple. I anticipate a very close relationship between the two organizations, each depending greatly on the other. I believe that this arrangement will help to improve the analytical capability of NFAC and the overall quality of national estimates.

2. The NIOs will continue to be the DCI's principal representatives in policy forums, and will continue to support the DCI in his role as member of the NSC and the DDCI as Intelligence Community representative to the SIGs--working through D/NFAC for NFAC assistance.

3. The NIC will share with the National Foreign Assessment Center the drafting of national estimates and will have sole responsibility for obtaining DCI approval of such estimates and Community coordination.

It is neither politically possible nor substantively advisable to eliminate the National Intelligence Estimate as an intelligence publication and as the formal view of the National Foreign Intelligence Board. This would be extraordinarily controversial both in the policy community and within the intelligence community. It would be viewed as contrary to the Administration's emphasis on ensuring the presentation of alternative or competitive points of view.

The Director of Central Intelligence is charged with the preparation of national intelligence. I think that the best quality National Intelligence Estimates can be produced by NFAC and the NIC sharing responsibility for the drafting of estimates. The small percentage of analysts in the major NFAC production offices who can draft high quality NIEs is already overworked. To meet my objectives for NIEs and improved intelligence support to policy, there will need to be a major increase in the number of estimates and a significant acceleration in their preparation time. I do not believe either the NIC or NFAC alone can meet this demand. Accordingly, in my weekly meeting with the DDCI, the Director of NFAC and the Chairman of the NIC, we will decide--depending upon availability of resources and the best talent available in both organizations--which should assume responsibility for preparing the first draft of specific estimates. (Occasionally, workload may require or we may prefer to have the NIC Chairman ask another element of the Community such as INR or DIA to prepare the initial draft.) NFAC drafts will be presented to the NIC for review, and the appropriate NIO will be responsible for getting my approval and for obtaining Community views. When the NIC prepares the first draft,

CONFIDENTIAL

CONFIDENTIAL

before coming to me the draft will be presented to NFAC for comment and criticism so that I will have available NFAC's views when I review the draft. When another Community element prepares the draft, the NIO will oversee preparation and coordination.

4. The NIC will have a small [] support group to help prepare materials for interdepartmental meetings and papers, including NSCs and SIGs, as well as to assist NIOs in their drafting responsibilities.

25X1

It is my intention that the NIC should be staffed by people of extremely high calibre from within the government and from the outside. I have decided that a small support group is justified on two grounds. First, their assistance will be necessary for the NIO to fulfill his various responsibilities as my representative in policy forums, in preparing materials for my and the DDCI's participation in interdepartmental meetings, in contributing to the preparation of interagency papers, and assisting in the drafting of estimates.

Equality, and perhaps more important, I believe that it is important to expose a small number of our very best analysts to the creative talents of the senior officers chosen as NIOs. The broad perspective, fresh thinking, judgment and wisdom of these officials is too valuable an asset not to be shared on a daily basis with our best young people as a unique training and educational experience. Through the NIOs, the analysts also can significantly enlarge their familiarity with a wide range of outside specialists and people with broad foreign policy experience—an invaluable asset and a useful investment for the future. NFAC and other intelligence organizations from which the Support Group analysts are drawn can only benefit from their service under these mentors in a rotational arrangement. This should help enormously in building a small cadre of analysts in the Community, and especially in NFAC, who have the capability to approach major issues with a geostrategic perspective and drafting skills honed by service in a small but intellectually highly charged and very demanding environment.

5. Each NIO will have one assistant.

CONFIDENTIAL